Studying and Living in the Heart of Europe

htw saar – University of Applied Sciences is one of the largest universities of applied sciences in the region with approximately 6,000 students. It is a multi-campus university with a very diverse student community. The percentage of international students is significantly higher than the national average. Currently, there are approximately 800 international students from over 60 countries learning together.

More than 40 Bachelor's and Master's programmes taught in German, English or French are offered by htw saar in these four schools: Business, Architecture & Civil Engineering, Engineering and Social Sciences.

Five good reasons to study at htw saar:

1. Highly structured study programmes with students in predominantly small groups
2. Excellent supervision and close contact with academic staff
3. Modern, well-equipped laboratories, lecture halls and seminar rooms
4. High-quality, practice-oriented teaching combined with real social, business and industrial applications for the changing needs of today's working environment
5. Top-level research with industry partners in Germany and abroad – In terms of third party research and development (R&D) funding, the htw saar is one of Germany's top-ranking universities of applied sciences.

Studies at htw saar are practice-oriented, with an excellent combination of hands-on skills and a strong theoretical knowledge base. Research is fundamental, and we attach great importance to applied research and development. We conduct research with industry partners in Germany and abroad, and we belong to the top ranked universities of applied sciences in Germany for R&D. International students are welcome to participate in the various R&D projects and get a better understanding of German cutting-edge technology and innovation.

University location

"When you live in Saarbrücken, you can have breakfast in Luxembourg, lunch in Belgium, and dinner in Paris – all in one day!"

With a population of around one million, Saarland is the smallest of the German federal states. The Lorraine region in France is only a stone's throw away, and Luxembourg is a mere 90 km from Saarbrücken. The very green region offers lots of space and opportunities for extended bike rides and hikes in the woods.

Excellent transport systems provide fast connections to major cities in Germany and throughout Europe. From Saarbrücken, the Intercity Express train service (ICE) takes you to Paris in less than two hours.

The city of Saarbrücken is the state capital and regional centre of the federal state of Saarland, which is situated at the heart of the Saar-Lor-Lux region. With approximately 180,000 inhabitants, Saarbrücken is the perfect size for an active student life. It is safe to walk and ride your bike everywhere, and the next pub, cinema, restaurant, gym or supermarket is never far away.

When it is time for a break from the books, there is always plenty going on, both on and off campus. Saarbrücken is a modern, dynamic city with a French flair that offers a variety of pubs and clubs as well as a diverse cultural scene. Get involved in one of the many sports and cultural clubs around the city and get to know the friendly locals.

For a taste of the good life, go ahead and try out some of the many regional culinary delights in Saarbrücken's numerous restaurants and cafés.

During the summer months, take a walk or a bike ride along the Saar river. Go ahead and join local students having a picnic on the lush greenery beside the river or during one of their favourite recreational activities: "Schwenken" (having a barbecue).
