Description/content	GeT MA - the German-Turkish Master's Programme - is an interdisciplinary and integrated Master's programme in social sciences. GeT MA students broaden their empirical knowledge of political processes. Academic courses are taught by highly qualified professors from different academic disciplines on various topics such as modernisation and democratisation, Europeanisation, and migration. Students deepen their empirical knowledge of political processes using Germany, Turkey, and other countries and regions of Europe as examples. Our aim is to do research together rather than about each other. The courses of the study programme offer a specialised perspective on current academic and political debates in these fields by using the examples of Turkey and Germany. Looking at the interplay of politics and society in German-Turkish relations as well as the European dimension of domestic and foreign politics in both countries will help students to cultivate the analytical and methodological tools used in comparative government, integration theories, and social change. Teaching and research have a clear interdisciplinary focus. The courses in the programme cover various sub-disciplines in political science and sociology and also address cultural and economic questions. This approach manifests itself through the participation of professors from different

Course Details

Course organisation	GeT MA - The German-Turkish Master's Programme in Social Sciences - is a unique, interdisciplinary, two-year Master's programme offering an excellent academic experience in two of Europe's vibrant capitals: Berlin, Germany and Ankara, Turkey. A specific characteristic of GeT MA is the concept of "Joint Teaching": at least one course in semesters one to three is taught jointly by faculty from both partner universities. By coming into contact with the experienced teaching staff from both universities throughout the programme, GeT MA students become familiar with topics and research themes from German and Turkish perspectives, experience individual teaching styles and gain insights into the respective university systems. Students attend graduate courses in the social sciences at the Middle East Technical University (METU) Ankara (year one), Turkey and Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, Germany (year two). Most GeT MA courses are taught specifically for GeT MA students. Some courses may be conducted together with our other international MA programmes. In addition, electives that are related to the topics of the GeT MA study programme and allow students to acquire a broader perspective can be chosen from the course catalogues of both universities.

GeT MA is a promising programme offering its students a variety of topics for deepening knowledge. I quickly understood that it is not about Germany and Turkey exclusively but about regional studies, history and comparative social sciences in general. This interdisciplinarity fuels expertise, reflective thinking and research. It made me a professional not only academically but also socially while being in contact with so many people with different inputs and perspectives from all over the world.

As one of eleven German universities, the Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin was chosen as a University of Excellence in June 2012. It was successful in all three funding lines in the third round of the Excellence Initiative of the German federal and state governments and was awarded for its future concept "Educating Enquiring Minds: Individuality - Openness - Guidance". In an international comparison, Humboldt-Universität ranks among the top ten German universities. Scientists at Humboldt-Universität research socially relevant topics and challenges of the future and communicate these with the public. Humboldt-Universität invests all of its energy into being a place of excellent research and teaching. Its aim is to promote young talent and to positively influence society and the economy outside of the university framework.

Every year, over 5,000 young people decide to embark on their studies at Humboldt-Universität in the heart of Berlin. There is hardly any other place where students can choose from the same variety of degree courses. Among these degree courses are several international Master's programmes featuring lectures and seminars held in English.

As a first-rate university, international exchange for both research and study programmes is a matter of course. Humboldt-Universität boasts academic partnerships with more than 400 Erasmus partners in Europe and with over 150 university partners worldwide. It also has partnerships with two Erasmus Mundus programmes. Over 1,500 mobile students participate in its four Erasmus Mundus External Cooperation Windows programmes.

Every year, about 800 academics from abroad spend time at Berlin's oldest university. Additionally, researchers from Humboldt-Universität are welcomed at various international universities, where they conduct projects or field studies and teach as guest lecturers. Humboldt-Universität helps students prepare to study abroad, providing consultation to international students and academics regarding all questions relating to their stay in Berlin. Through the creation of international networks, Humboldt-Universität plays an active role in furthering intercultural research and teaching.

University location

This unique programme offers students the opportunity to study in the capital cities of both Germany and Turkey: Berlin and Ankara.
