Description/content	Are you interested in how companies and entire economies operate in global markets? Are you fascinated by other cultures and economic areas, and can you imagine working in an internationally operating company, research institution or in an international organisation? Our Master's programme in International Economics and Management – IEM for short – offers you a wide range of opportunities for living internationalisation.

Our compulsory modules are taught in English. With regard to the further module selection during your studies, you are free to decide whether you want to fill your study plan only with modules taught in English or to also include modules taught in German. But it is not only through the modules taught in English that you can improve your language skills and gain international experience. In addition, numerous partner universities as well as various co-operations around the world offer you the opportunity to spend a semester abroad or take part in a double degree programme, summer schools or short-term programmes. More than one third of our students, thus your fellow students, come from abroad. In a weekly forum, we encourage cross-cultural exchange through social events, excursions and exciting lectures.

We provide you with the necessary theoretical and methodological knowledge to answer the question of how global markets actually work, what influence they have on organisations and how a company can position itself successfully in these markets. At the same time, the study plan offers a high degree of flexibility to enable you to tailor the programme to your individual interests by establishing a focus in the fields of economics and management. This opens the door to leading and strategically oriented management positions in internationally operating companies, organisations and research institutions. Your specific field of application area then depends on your individually chosen study track.

Possible career profiles:

- Manager in a multinational firm
- Management consultant, data analyst
- Position in an international organisation
- Position in an NGO
- Position in a financial institution or central bank
- Research-oriented career

Detailed information can be found on the website of the study programme: https://www.uni-paderborn.de/en/studyoffer/course_of_study/international-economics-and-management-master.

Course Details

Course organisation

International Economics and Management is a four-semester programme. Typically, the academic year begins in the winter semester, but it is also possible to begin in the summer semester. Three modules worth 10 ECTS credits each must be completed in each semester (ECTS = European Credit Transfer System, 1 ECTS credit is equivalent to a workload of around 30 hours). Therefore, a total of 120 ECTS credits is needed to complete the programme.

Your course of study offers lots of flexibility. Only two compulsory modules provide you with basic methodological competences including mathematical abilities as well as empirical and econometric methods. In all other areas, you can choose your modules according to your interests and thus create your own profile.

Half of the freely selectable credit points (ECTS) are attributed to the area of "economics", another quarter to the area of "management" and for the last quarter, you can choose from all modules of business administration and economics. For example, you can decide to create an "international management" focus by selecting more management modules or other business administration modules as general electives, or you can give yourself a "research-oriented and data analysis" profile by choosing additional credit points from the quantitative-methodological area. Our study tracks give you a good impression of the topics of our lecturers.

Furthermore, the Master's thesis contributes to your individual profile-building and career goal. You can write your thesis in any field of business administration, management or economics in order to apply your acquired knowledge you have gained during your studies to a scientific problem.

The study plan (see the PDF download below) provides an overview of the amount of ECTS in the respective areas. However, the structure shown here is just an example.

Services

Possibility of finding part-time employment

Students may obtain paid jobs either at Paderborn University (e.g. as a student tutor or an assistant) or in other positions outside the university. Excellent students have the opportunity to work as student assistants in research groups.

Accommodation

There are two types of student accommodation in Germany: dormitories located on or near the university campus and private accommodation in a flat or an apartment. In Germany, most of the apartments are usually unfurnished! To save money and to have more living space, students often set up an apartment-sharing community and live together. There are two dormitories on the Paderborn campus which are run and managed by the student services ("Studentenwerk"). Students can apply for a one-room apartment or a room with a communal kitchen and bathroom that are usually shared with one to three other students.

Please visit the homepage of the Studentenwerk (student services) directly:

<https://www.studierendenwerk-pb.de/en/housing/> or contact the International Office:

<https://www.uni-paderborn.de/en/studium/international-office/>.

Rental charges currently range from 260 to 500 EUR per room and month (private renting), including costs for electricity, gas, water, etc. If rooms are furnished, the landlord is likely to ask for a deposit, which is usually equivalent to two months' rent. This is returned to the student on departure if the room is left in a satisfactory state and all rent payments have been made.

Career advisory service

Paderborn University Career Service

The career service is the gateway between university and working life. It supports students and graduates in all phases of their studies with questions about professional orientation and career goals, job-related study planning, and career entry.

Paderborn University

Paderborn University

© Paderborn University

Paderborn University is a campus university within walking distance of the city centre. A large number of student residences are located on the campus. The campus provides a wide range of services and facilities, including an excellent "Mensa" (canteen), sports facilities and a small theatre. For more information, see: <https://www.uni-paderborn.de/en/>.

University location

Despite its very modern service- and entertainment-oriented appeal, Paderborn also offers opportunities for the historically inclined, including a 700-year-old cathedral overlooking the city centre. Paderborn is known to be a very safe place, while it also offers many occasions for students to enjoy themselves. The most famous occasion is the annual "Libori" funfair, but students may also enjoy the quieter Christmas market in December. For more information, see: <https://www.paderborn.de/microsite/welcome/index.php>.
