| Description/content | This well-established two-year international Master’s programme (on average 75% of the programme participants are international students) is designed for students interested in a more in-depth study of theoretical and descriptive linguistics. It creates a solid basis for linguistic analysis and comparison. A wide variety of seminars and lectures is offered in different areas:
♦ Language Theories and Traditions in Linguistic Thinking
♦ Grammar (of European Languages)
♦ (European) Varieties and Minority Languages
♦ (European) Language History
♦ Language and Interaction
♦ Language and Cognition |
Additional research modules include an internship, a conference visit and classes on research design.

Services

Accommodation

As Freiburg is an attractive city, finding a suitable place to live can take a little time. Only some of our international students can be offered a room in a student dormitory. The Studentenwerk (student social services) is in charge of the student dormitories. Applicants must expect a waiting period. In addition to these dormitories, several independent dormitories are listed on the university website. The Studentenwerk also offers a list of available private rooms, and the International Office can be contacted for further assistance in finding accommodation (http://www.international.uni-freiburg.de).
