Description/content	This cutting-edge programme builds upon the international research and graduate teaching expertise of faculty at Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München (LMU Munich). It familiarises students with key thematic issues and methodologies for working in the context of environment and society, trains them to critically analyse and communicate challenges or solutions, and highlights thinking across and beyond disciplines through hands-on, field-based, and creative learning. As part of their coursework, students engage actively with local urban and rural environments, as well as look beyond to a series of environmental themes and challenges worldwide, from climate change and environmental transformation, extinction, and conservation to environmental justice, pollution, and health.

RCC

Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München (LMU Munich) is a leading research university in Europe. Since its founding in 1472, it has been committed to the highest international standards of excellence in research and teaching.

The Rachel Carson Center for Environment and Society (RCC), part of LMU Munich, is an international centre dedicated to the study of environment and society from a wealth of different disciplines and international perspectives.

As a non-profit institution, the RCC was founded in 2009 as a joint initiative of Munich's Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität and the Deutsches Museum, funded by the German Federal Ministry of Education and Research as a Center for Advanced Study (Käte Hamburger Kolleg). The RCC has since evolved into a permanent centre directed by LMU Munich's Chair in American Cultural History.
