Description/content

The Master's degree programme in Linguistics – Language, Communication and Cognition is offered jointly by the linguistic subjects of the Faculty of Philology and the Department of Cognitive Science of the Institute of Psychology. The programme aims to explore language in its forms and functions, in its variability, in its history and development, in its cognitive prerequisites and conditions as well as in its communicative function. It offers students the possibility of individual specialisation in one of the following six fields : English Language and Linguistics, General Linguistics and Linguistic Diversity, German Linguistics, Language and Cognition, Romance Linguistics, or Slavic Linguistics. If you choose the specialisations in English Language and Linguistics or General Linguistics and Linguistic Diversity, you can complete the degree exclusively in English.

Course Details

Course organisation

This MA programme in Linguistics – Language, Communication and Cognition is structured into two domains. The first domain (shaded yellow and blue in the table) comprises courses that are taught by all participating disciplines including the introductory lecture, a broad variety of methods seminars, and colloquia. The second domain (shaded green in the table) consists of the modules in the specialisation that each student chooses. Specialisations are offered in English Language and Linguistics, General Linguistics and Linguistic Diversity, German Linguistics, Romance Linguistics, Slavic Linguistics, and Language & Cognition. There is flexibility as to how many modules a student wishes to choose from their specialisation, and whether or not a student would like to try out modules from another specialisation for greater variety. The Scandinavian department offers additional courses in Scandinavian linguistics that can be optionally chosen. This programme thus combines the full breadth of courses from all linguistics and cognitive science departments at the University of Freiburg. At the same time, students deepen their competence in their chosen specialisation. This MA programme thus prepares for a professional future in linguistics in or outside of academia, combining broad theoretical and empirical skills with deep, focussed training.
