Target group	Learners of German who are either working in medical professions or who are studying or planning to study a related subject
Description/content	This German language course is intended for medical employees and medical students who want to improve their general German skills with a special focus on medical terminology and communication with patients and colleagues. Under the guidance of our highly qualified, committed and experienced language teachers, you can discuss medical case studies and simulations, e.g. doctor-patient consultations, and you will practise vocabulary and structures of medical reports. You will be able to deepen and expand your oral and written competence while practising medical evidence terminology and discussing the health system and hospital structure in Germany as well as aspects of intercultural communication. The lessons follow the aims of communicative competence of the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) in an entertaining and inspiring way and will assist your independent learning process. The language course takes place from Monday to Friday in the mornings. Each morning there are four teaching units (45 minutes each). In the afternoon, you can choose from seminars on different current issues in the areas of cultural and social sciences, e.g. history, literature, film, environment, European policy and interculturality. A graded certificate will be issued to all participants at the end of the course. It will include your individual language level following CEFR as well as your ECTS credits.
